When The Cameras Stop

With the camera off, they were able to speak freely. Lars never looked at him, instead studying his shoes.

"There's something I want to tell you," he mumbled.

Raising an eyebrow, Dave leaned back against the couch. He may have seemed relaxed on the outside but, inside, his heart was pounding, the adrenaline racing.

Lars shook his head. "I've kept it quiet for so long."

"Go on," he softly pressed, mouth dry.

Tear glistened eyes looked up at him, and Dave felt his heart cry.

"I never wanted you to leave the band," Lars finally whispered.
